Guidance for IGO Group Members

General

IGO groups are run by members for members. The groups will run groups on a voluntary basis for their own sake, with knowledge and enthusiasm for the benefit of other IGO members and should be supported and encouraged by members. IGO staff members and Trust staff will not be involved in the running of groups.

IGO encourages self-help learning and members help to decide their own learning routes which are not directed towards qualifications.

Guidance for IGO Group Leaders

General

The people who run groups are volunteers who bring their own skills, knowledge and enthusiasm to the benefit of other IGO members and should be supported and encouraged by members. IGO staff members and Trust staff will not be involved in the running of groups.

IGO encourages self-help learning and members help to decide their own learning routes which are not directed towards qualifications.

A very wide range of subjects is available to members, including games, languages, practical activities, conversation and crafts.

Some groups are intended to be flexible for discussion about a wide range of issues including political and religious topics. However, members should refrain from promoting particular religious or political beliefs and should always be respectful to those in the groups or offline.

IGO groups are open to all members but encouragement through groups can be given to those who are interested in many different areas of study and members are encouraged to help and support each other in their own groups in their own way and for their own benefit.
